With the permission of the instructor of the course, students that feel they are capable of demonstrating proficiency in the subject matter of a course without taking the course may challenge the course by writing a special examination prepared and evaluated by the instructor. The student who challenges a course will receive the appropriate academic grade for their level of achievement and will be credited with the unit credits which the course normally carries. However, the grade on their record will be designated to indicate that it was earned by challenging the course.
